

KANSAS REPUBLICANS.

The action of the rampant body of Kansas Republicans, in holding the Hall of Representatives by force of arms at Topeka will do more to strengthen the Populist cause throughout the United States than anything that could have happened.

The trouble arose when the Populist party found that three of their Representatives had been counted out in the election and presented the proofs so clearly that they unseated the fraudulent Republican members in the Lower House.

They then combined with the Democrats and obtained control of the legislature, electing John A. Martin a Topeka Democrat to the U. S. Senate. The unseating of the three Republican members and the election of a Democrat to the Senate maddened the Republicans and they resorted to force of arms to carry their points.

This has of late years been the great stumbling block of the Republican party. As long as it can have its own way and run everything to suit itself, it makes a great pretense of upholding the law, prates about purity of elections, the sanctity of the ballot box, and all that, but the instant its will is thwarted it resorts to bayonet rule and gunpowder to perpetuate its lease of power.

Harrison, in his anxiety to stay four years longer in the White House, devised the Force Bill, to place the elections in the hands of federal soldiers, and the people of the United States repudiated his trickery and smothered his ambition at the polls in so decisive a manner, that for the next hundred years it is not likely that such an attempt will be repeated in the United States.

SENATOR C. A. LA GRAVE.

He Addresses the Farmers of Lovelock and Vicinity.

Senator C. A. La Grave addressed the farmers and citizens of Lovelock last Sunday afternoon on Senate Bill No. 12, providing for the control and proper distribution of the waters of the State. The meeting was well attended; Young's Hall being provided for the occasion. He opened his address by referring to the contempt he has for any anonymous writer who attempts, over a pseudonym, to vilify anybody, and particularly referred to "Civia" of Lovelock, and challenged any person to show, as was stated, that there "was a nigger in the fence." He then went on to outline the present status of the water question, showing how every owner or claimant of water on the Humboldt can under the existing laws be made a party to every action brought, and showing the inadequacy of the present system by stating that it would likely take two generations to settle disputed rights. So long as the water rights are unsettled it will be impossible to get strangers to come in and settle upon lands or buy landed property on any stream.

In California, where irrigation projects had been carried out, the rights had been amicably settled under the Wright law. In Colorado and Wyoming, where prosperity exists on the farm, an Act similar to the proposed one, has been in action with good results and he naturally thought that a law which would be beneficial in States so similar, to ours should have a chance for debate in our Legislature, where objectionable and unconstitutional features might be discussed in the Legislature and out of the Legislature, and that likely, with the Senate Bill No. 12 as a nucleus, the main system being good, a law adapted to the needs and demands of the farmers of the State could be framed, and such was his motive in introducing the measure, expecting that in committee it will be amended to suit the exigencies of the water question in Nevada. He knew of unconstitutional provisions in the bill and pointed them out, he also spoke of objectionable features, which would be amended in committee, though of the opinion that the session was so well on nothing could be done in this Legislature, yet it was up for discussion for the next two years in which time a thorough understanding of the salient points would be brought about.

The Supreme Court of California has decided that the bond offered for a stay of proceedings in the Hale & Norcross case is not sufficient.
